For centuries nomadic Paiutes and other Native Americans made trails in these mountains and valleys while foraging for summer food. No doubt earlier white men had been here too, but the first recorded visit to Pine Valley was in the summer of 1855 by Isaac Riddle, who was tracking a lost cow. He wrote of his first glimpse from the Ridge, "There stretching before me was the most beautiful sight I had ever beheld on God's green earth." Since then many have echoed those same sentiments. Pine Valley was quickly settled by those seeking lumber. The timber industry gave way to ranching and now it is also a mecca for recreation. May your meal at the famous Brandin Iron Steak House add to your Pine Valley experience.
